ABOUT INDIAN INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY KHARAGPUR

“Yoga Karmashu Kaushalam” is the ingrained letter in the insignia of the Indian Institute of Technology Kharagpur, which is the oldest IIT in this country. This literally means, “Excellence in action is Yoga”, which signifies its tenacity towards tradition and modernity. This determination of the institute is evident in its research outputs, placement drives and overall development of its student, teacher, and non-teaching community. “Dedicated to the service of the Nation” is the institute’s motto; imbibing this spirit, the institute has initiated courses in a field other than that of technology, viz; Law, Management, Social Sciences and Medical Sciences. This is pertinent for the wholesome growth of the Nation.

ABOUT THE CONFERENCE

Criminal law is the foundation of the criminal justice system, and owing to greater demands for peace and harmony within the society, it brings substantial changes to the criminal justice system. Here, the basic principles essential for understanding the criminal law include the concepts of criminal acts, criminal intent, concurrence between act and intent, causality, responsibility, and defenses. In this regard, it is imperative to address the question: what distinguishes “criminal law” from all other laws? This question is central to both criminal law theory and criminal justice reform. Clarity about the distinctive feature(s) of criminal law is important, especially when there is no clear consensus among contemporary scholars or reformers about what makes the criminal law unique. Having said so, the domain of criminal law and justice is an ever engaging and thought-provoking realm of law, particularly in the light of issues such as the use of police powers, the rights of the suspect during the police investigation, access to legal advice, the trial process, etc. In fact, owing to permanence and expansion of pre-inchoate offences, the domain of criminal law is witnessing a marked preventive turn. Further, from their national origins, some of the basic principles of domestic criminal law have percolated into the international legal arena via their incorporation into treaties and their acceptance (as general principles of law or even as part of customary international law). In addition, through automation process, machine learning and artificial intelligence systems are challenging the world to reconsider the fundamental questions of criminal law and justice. At the same time, there are arguments drawn towards advancing changes within the existing criminal justice framework, which indeed will have ramifications for procedure established by law.

The Rajiv Gandhi School of Intellectual Property Law (RGSoIPL) in collaboration with West Bengal National University of Juridical Sciences (WBNUJS) and National Law University Meghalaya are conducting a 2-days Conference to explore contemporary trends in crime, justice and technology and comprehend the future prospects, including inherent challenges that are likely to confront the established notions of criminal law and justice.
